The Internal Family Systems Model

Internal Family Systems (IFS) is a therapeutic model that views every human being as a system of protective and wounded inner parts guided by a core Self. It teaches that the mind is naturally multiple—and that this multiplicity is healthy—because, like members of a family, inner parts can be pushed into extreme roles but also have valuable inherent qualities. IFS helps people access their undamaged, compassionate Self, which knows how to heal, and from that inner leadership, understand and transform their parts, fostering both inner and outer connectedness.

Internal Family Systems: An Emerging Evidence Base, A Strong Foundation for More Research

The IFS Institute is committed to supporting rigorous research to establish the feasibility, acceptability, safety, and efficacy/effectiveness of the IFS therapeutic approach across different clinical presentations. Emerging evidence from small randomized clinical trials and quasi-experimental single-arm studies has highlighted the potential that IFS holds, with positive pilot studies among patients with depression and/or post-traumatic stress disorder. Multiple studies have demonstrated increases in self-compassion. The current body of research remains limited in scope, so well-designed randomized controlled trials (RCTs) with replication for each specific mental health condition are required to establish IFS as an evidence-based intervention for condition-specific mental health treatment indications. To date, reductions in depression are the only mental health condition that has demonstrated statistically significant improvement across multiple pilot RCTs. Larger fully-powered clinical trials are needed for each clinical indication. Finally, though several studies report high levels of acceptability, the risk of harm or adverse events needs to be systematically studied. The studies conducted thus far have provided valuable preliminary insights and represent a strong foundation for future research.

Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

Our goal at IFS Institute is to create learning environments and a community that teach and support the internal welcoming of parts that have been exiled, shamed, or marginalized within our systems so that they may be seen, heard, valued, and ultimately healed. Our hope is that this work will lead to greater Self leadership where all of us are more connected, curious, and compassionate with ourselves and with each other. Curriculum

Overview: Trauma often gives rise to internal systems that are layered, highly protective, and difficult to access through standard therapeutic approaches. This advanced training offers a framework for understanding and working with trauma and complex systems through the IFS model. Participants will explore how trauma shapes internal organization, protective strategies, and the therapeutic relationship, while refining their capacity to work effectively with complex systems. Emphasis is placed on cultivating a trauma-sensitive IFS interventions and deepening the therapist's use of Self in the healing process.

Structured similarly to IFS Level 1, the training integrates lectures, live demonstrations, experiential exercises, and practice sessions to support both conceptual understanding and embodied learning.

This training:

- Concentrates on the challenges of working with clients who have experiences of trauma, have extremely protective systems, and/or have complex systems.
- Emphasizes the therapist's Self in the therapeutic relationship with complex systems and deepens the participant's relationship to their parts.
- Explores the impact of intergenerational, cultural, and current trauma for determining discernment for relational and/or unburdening processes.
- Focuses on expanding the participant's knowledge of trauma informed processes unique to IFS, such as working with intense polarizations, rigid protectors, and exile led systems, as well as methods for integration.

Format: The training includes lectures, large and small group discussions, live and video demonstrations, and experiential practice groups.

Scope of Practice: Materials and methods included in this course may include interventions or practices that are beyond your scope of practice. As a professional in your given field, you are responsible for reviewing the scope of practice, including activities that are defined by applicable law as beyond the boundaries of your practice, and applying your learning in compliance with your professional standards.

Learning Objectives are listed on the IFS Institute website: Level 2 IFS Training Learning Objectives.
